DINO NUGGETS COME TO LIFE! CHILDREN TURN SAVAGE!

The popular known chicken nuggets in the shape of dinosaurs, also known as Dino Nuggets, started coming to life. To the surprise of parents, these small nuggets grew into the actual size of their dinosaur counterparts. Scientists have concluded that an unknown chemical was added into the nuggets before they were frozen and packaged. Fortunately, the chemical has no effect on humans. Scientists hypothesized that the chemical was added to enhance the flavor of the Dino Nuggets. Poor choice on the company that produced the Dino Nuggets. According to a recent interview with the company of Dino Nuggets, they said "Children need extra nutrients in order to grow big and strong. When we introduced the vegetable meat Dino Nuggets, children refused to eat them. Those who did put the veggie dinos in their mouth immediately spat them out. We added the chemical to enhance the flavor and make them taste delicious." While the chemical did prove to make children eat more of the Veggie Dinosaurs, it unfortunately made the food come to life. While these giant snacks roam around the world, parents are dealing with another problem. Children all over the world have turned savage. Scientists are unsure as to what caused all children to go wild and hunt down the dinosaurs like wolves to a deer, but they assumed that it could be the "parents not feeding their children." After interviewing with many parents, they confirmed that their children were not eating the food offered on the table. According to one parent, they said "No stars for these Veggie Dinosaurs! My daughter left for school before the dino nuggets turned into actual dinosaurs. 3 Days. She never came home. Police could never catch her. We tried luring her with regular chicken nuggets, but she hissed and growled at us before running off to attack one of those giant long necked dinosaurs." Another parent was interviewed, saying "Ever since my son came home from school, he said nothing before grabbing his younger brother and leaving the house in a hurry. We thought that he was running away and kidnapping our youngest, but it turned out that he was bringing his brother for a hunt. We watched in terror as they slaughtered the T-Rex nugget, pulling its limbs apart one by one before finishing their kill with a lick of their fingers. Ketchup was spilt everywhere." The rest of the story was cut out due to it being too graphic of ketchup and crumbs. Many parents are coming together to start rallying against the company for "being the reason their children never came home."

While we haven't heard from the company about their plans to resolve the situation of the dino nuggets and the savage children, we can only gather from rumors that they're either leaving the situation as is until the children consume the giant nuggets to extinction or the Dino Nuggets would be wiped out from a ketchup volcano. Government officials have been ordered to stand down until each and every Dino Nugget has been devoured. Parents and anyone else unaffected by the savage behavior are advised to keep away and "survive until the dinosaurs are extinct."
